DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

1. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

2. Claims 1-4 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Morishita (5,127,380) in view of Agarrat (5,465,694).

Regarding claim 1: Morishita discloses a camshaft thrust cam cap assembly for an engine including a camshaft spaced from a crankshaft, said assembly comprising at least one thrust cam cap disposed on said camshaft (see figure 10); Morishita further disclose the thrust cam cap is disposed on the second bearing (see numeral 154).

Morishita fails to disclose a thrust bearing cap is disposed on the crankshaft and being positioned such that said thrust cam cap falls within an angle of about 5 degrees respect to an axis having an origin at said thrust bearing cap and extending perpendicularly with respect to said camshaft.

However, Agarrat discloses a thrust bearing cap is disposed on the crankshaft and being positioned such that the second cam bearing falls within an angle of about 5 degrees respect to an axis having an origin at said thrust bearing cap and extending perpendicularly with respect to said camshaft.

It would have been obvious to one having ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to modify Morishita's device by incorporating the thrust bearing cap for the crankshaft as taught by Agarrat in order to improve the engine performance.

Regarding claims 2,3: With regard to the location of thrust bearing cap, it is the examiners position that the claimed positions would have been an obvious matter of design choice well within the level of ordinary skill in the art depending upon the engine type and size. Moreover, there is nothing in the record which establishes that the claimed specific locations present a novel or unexpected result (see In re Kuhle, 526 F.2d 553, 188 USPQ 7 (CCPA 1975)).

Regarding claim 4: Morishita discloses the thrust cam cap is mounted over a bearing surface to carry the camshaft; and said thrust cam cap forms a bearing part that protrudes with respect to a width of the bearing surface to support longitudinal movement of the camshaft at a lateral side of said thrust cam cap (see column 10,12-15).

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

3. The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(b) the invention was patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country or in public use or on sale in this country, more than one year prior to the date of application for patent in the United States.

Art Unit: 3748

4. Claims 5,6 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by Nakatani et al. (4,957,079).

Regarding claim 5: Nakatani discloses a camshaft thrust cam cap (see figures 3,4), comprising: a body member having two sides defining a width therebetween and defining a concave opening along one edge extending between sides for receiving a camshaft therein (see figure 4); a bearing part disposed along a periphery of said concave opening on at least one side of said body part and protruding from said side (see figure 3).

Regarding claim 6: Nakatani discloses said body member defines holes at opposite ends of the body member running between said sides for securing the body member to a cylinder head (see figure 4).
